The Professional Project Management Body of Knowledge (PMBOK® Guide, Fifth Edition, McGraw Hill/Prentice Hall, 2014) states that project initiation comprises four phases: Planning, Monitoring, Control, and Closure. The monitoring phase is focused on ensuring that the project objectives are being met. More specifically, during this phase of the project, information on what work is being performed is collected (Figure 1-1), and recorded. Figure 1-1. Information collected during monitoring Control involves evaluating and reporting on the information gathered during monitoring. This includes updating the progress of the project, which is accomplished by tracking how much work has been completed to date. Finally, after all work is completed, the results and/or benefits of project work can be evaluated. The PMBOK® Guide (see Figure 1-2), Version 6.0, also states that risk management is one of the five processes used to manage the project. The following steps outline the process of risk management: 1. Identify a risk Figure 1-2. Risk management process 2. Map the risk 3. Take action 4. Monitor the risk 5. Evaluate the risk 6. Assess the risk 7. Reward success The risk management process includes managing and controlling risk associated with a project. In the PMBOK®, Version 6.0, the following steps outline risk management in a typical project: 1. Identifying a risk Typically, the project sponsor, or the person responsible for the overall project, identifies a specific risk to the project. This risk is documented along with a description of the specific risk, as well as any mitigating factors that might have an influence on the risk. The impact of the risk on the project is also identified. The sponsor makes an educated estimate regarding the likelihood of the project failing to complete successfully, and the estimated impact of any failure. 2. Map the risk The sponsor and stakeholders complete a Risk Assessment, documenting the risk and their assessment of the likelihood and impact of the project failing to complete successfully. 3. Take action The sponsor and stakeholders meet to discuss the specific risk, and explore the potential impact and likelihood of the project failing to successfully complete, and then makes appropriate decisions to mitigate the risk. 4.
